Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: The applicant argues that the combination of Hussmann and Ritter does not specifically teach the wireless communication device is connected to an antenna included in said subscriber identity module and the motivation to combine references. The examiner respectfully disagrees. Hussmann teaches an RFID is attached to an object and comprises memory, antenna and an integrated circuit (Paragraphs 0028 and 0029), wherein the integrated circuit may be programmed with information, i.e., IMSI, by means of the air interface from the SIM module (Figure 2 and Paragraphs 0031, 0034 and 0035). Hussmann does not exclude the teaching that the RFID transponder can be attached to a SIM card in a mobile device. In the same analogous art, Ritter teaches that a SIM card comprises an antenna that can communicate with an external device via indicative or electromagnetic waves without communicating with wireless network, which functions like a RFID transponder in addition to a traditional SIM card (Abstract and Page 6 Lines 15-20, Page 7 Lines 11-24 and Page 8 Lines 9-15). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of invention to combine Hussmann and Ritter references because it provides flexibility in the system since it allows one device to be used for multiple communications via different networks. The combination of Hussmann and Ritter teaches the claimed invention except for SIM card and RFID transponder as separate components and the transponder is placed in the SIM card. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time of invention was made to BBBBBB, since it has been held that constructing a formerly integral structure in various elements and rearranging parts of an invention involves only routine skill in the art.
